The International Endodontic Journal – a contemporary publication

The International Endodontic Journal (IEJ) aims to provide essential reading for general dental practitioners, specialist endodontists, researchers, scientists, students and dental teachers. Thousands of readers benefit from the content of the IEJ. Articles published in the IEJ are downloaded frequently, and over the years we have monitored a constant growth in downloaded papers. In fact, well over 300 000 articles are downloaded on a yearly basis. The readership of the IEJ is certainly international, with more than 6500 libraries and consortia worldwide having access to the Journal.

Readers of the IEJ have access to the best authors in the field of endodontics and related sciences. Articles published range amongst the most cited publications worldwide. The impact factor, reporting on the level of citation, has over the years placed the IEJ amongst the most cited journals in dentistry. Readers not only have access to the very latest research and clinical articles published online before print to ensure rapid publication times, but also to a wealth of high level papers published over the years. The IEJ provides online access to all material previously published – with full search facilities as well as free access to abstracts.

Development of features to benefit both researchers and readers is a focal point for the IEJ. In summer 2009, we will launch a new website hosting articles published in the IEJ. The site will provide the best service for readers and ensure the extended distribution of high quality papers.
