

TIPS FOR AUTHORS

Author Responsibilities

by Nellie Kremenak, PhD, Manuscript Editor

doi: 10.1111/j.1532-849X.2007.00299.x

The specific responsibilities of authorship are defined by the disciplines of the authors and the practical requirements of a particular journal. In this Tips for Authors we will discuss these responsibilities for individuals submitting manuscripts to the Journal of Prosthodontics. We will also touch briefly on the ethical responsibilities of all authors.

The first author

The JP sets different tasks for the “first” author, the individual whose name is listed first after the title, and for the “corresponding” author, the individual who will be responsible for communication with the JP’s staff during the submission, review, and publication processes. The first author and the corresponding author may be the same person but often they are two separate individuals.

The first author has principal responsibility for the content of the report (although all authors share in that responsibility). When the report has been accepted for publication, the first author completes and returns the copyright assignment form to the Managing Editor and makes sure that all authors understand that the copyright has been assigned to the publisher. In addition, the first author determines whether he or she or any of the other authors have any relationships that could be construed as a conflict of interest with the content of the report and ensures that those relationships are disclosed to the JP staff so that they can be reported to readers. For example, if one of the author-researchers received research support from the manufacturer of a material tested in the reported study, that fact must be disclosed to the journal staff and as part of the publication.

The corresponding author

The corresponding author manages the practical details of the submission process and is available for communication with the Managing Editor, the Section Editor, and the publisher’s staff. The corresponding author corrects page proofs as needed, responds to queries from the JP staff, and keeps the other authors informed on the manuscript’s progress through the submission, review, and publication process. The corresponding author may be responsible for ordering reprints for the other authors and, after publication, may also be the first point of contact for reader queries about the study or technique.

All authors are responsible for the content of a report

Conventions vary among institutions as to who is included as an author on a published report. In some localities, only those individuals directly involved in the project will be listed. In others, as a courtesy, the head of the department or research unit may be routinely listed as an author.

Regardless of local conventions, it is important to remember that all authors share responsibility for the content of the report.

Final thought

For detailed instructions on preparing and submitting a manuscript for publication, go to the Journal’s submission website at <http://mc.manuscriptcentral.com/jopr> (click “Instructions and Forms”).

Copyright of Journal of Prosthodontics is the property of Blackwell Publishing Limited and its content may not be copied or emailed to multiple sites or posted to a listserv without the copyright holder's express written permission. However, users may print, download, or email articles for individual use.

Copyright of Journal of Prosthodontics is the property of Blackwell Publishing Limited and its content may not be copied or emailed to multiple sites or posted to a listserv without the copyright holder's express written permission. However, users may print, download, or email articles for individual use.