

Three Years On...

It has been an exciting experience for the editors to observe the growth of Oral Health and Preventive Dentistry. There has been continued appreciation from readers and authors regarding the concept of the Journal, uniting all fields of prevention within periodontology, cariology and oral medicine.

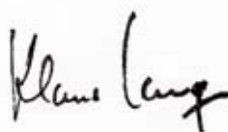

It is with great satisfaction that we have received manuscripts from the academic communities of as many as 34 countries. The editors continuously admire the substantial number of colleagues who have served as referees, offering priority to limit the review times, and we are particularly grateful for their efforts. The Journal has been further supported by constant improvements to the Electronic Editorial Office and online submission, and together these circumstances have led to an efficient editorial process and faster publication times.

The foundations for a prosperous future for Oral Health and Preventive Dentistry are certainly looking good.

Jean-François Roulet

Niklaus Lang

Palle Holmstrup